

Not all disabilities look like this

Assisting adults and children with hidden disabilities

Not all disabilities are visible - some are not immediately obvious, such as autism, chronic pain, dementia, anxiety, visual or hearing impairment. Living with a hidden disability can make daily life more challenging for many people, but it can be difficult for others to recognize, acknowledge or understand the challenges those with hidden disabilities face.

The Hidden Disabilities Sunflower lanyard makes one with a disability visible

Wearing the Hidden Disabilities Sunflower discreetly indicates to airport and airline staff that those wearing the lanyard may need additional support, help or a little more time.

How can wearing the Hidden Disabilities Sunflower at the Airport benefit people with disabilities?

- Airline and security staff as well as staff in airport shops and restaurants may offer those wearing a lanyard additional support as they travel through the airport.
- Persons with disabilities can use the Hidden Disabilities Sunflower lanyard to start a conversation with airport staff about the additional help that is needed.

sunflower
lanyard scheme

If you would like a sunflower lanyard or have any questions, please visit the accessibility section of your respective airport's website:

www.NewarkAirport.com, www.JFKAirport.com or www.LaGuardiaAirport.com

You may also go to www.hiddendisabilitiesstore.com